Brief Details

World Wetlands Day, celebrated annually on February 2nd, aims to raise awareness about the importance of wetlands for biodiversity, climate regulation, and the well-being of both ecosystems and human populations. The Department of Medical Sciences and Zoology at Akal University, Talwandi Sabo, host three events to honor the significance of wetlands and promote their conservation. The event included a Poster Making Competition, a Speech Competition, and an Essay Writing Competition, all designed to encourage students to explore the theme of wetland conservation from different creative and academic perspectives. The event brought together students, faculty members to celebrate and discuss the critical role that wetlands play in global ecosystems
